Sir

I must beg leave to trouble you once more in the affair of my pension. Yesterday I called on Mr. Appleton for what I expected was due to me, but altho he found my name in the act which contained the list of pensioners, yet he could not find it in the list sent to him by the Secretary at war, so that he did not consider himself at liberty to pay me any thing. He therefore advised me to write to some friend at Congress Requesting him to inquire at the proper office there Requesting that proper order might be forwarded on to him to pay out the ~~prop~~ pension whatever it may be. I must therefore wish you would be pleased to see that it is done and thereby you will lay an additional obligation on your humble servant
